Stay Curious

Children are at their most successful when their imagination is stimulated, their curiosity is heightened, and their learning makes links to their lives and the wider world.

We recognise that children learn best when they feel safe, secure and happy therefore relationship-based pedagogy is at the heart of all we do.

Ofsted

The school sits at the heart of its local community. Everyone is welcome... staff waste no time in getting to know pupils and families.

They study a broad curriculum...

Staff's judicious use of praise makes pupils feel genuinely valued. A highlight for many pupils is receiving a 'Shout Out' postcard home to share notable achievements.

Pupils, including those in the early years, behave well because they understand and follow the school rules well. Pupils know that staff are on hand to talk things through when something goes wrong. The resources around school, which pupils readily use, help them to think about mutual respect and tolerance.

Ofsted

The curriculum enriches pupils' experiences and knowledge. For example, pupils learn about contemporary composers and artists such as Errollyn Wallen and Barabra Hepworth. The school's residential visit programme is extensive and fosters teamwork well. Staff teach pupils that showing empathy and understanding diversity are central to becoming effective young citizens. If bullying happens, pupils are confident that staff sort it out.

Leaders have undertaken considerable work to improve the curriculum. It is suitably ambitious and includes what pupils should know and remember in every subject.

Ofsted

The whole curriculum, including the early years, covers a broad range of subjects.

Leaders have pursued a strong emphasis on developing pupils' oracy skills. In addition, leaders' strategy to teach pupils technical vocabulary in a wide range of subjects is paying off. Across the school, many pupils develop confidence in speaking and debating across a range of subjects.

Pupils develop confidence and resilience through the curriculum and assembly themes over time.
